To Lesbia

(After Catullus).

Beloved, let us live and love, nor pay
One penny fee for what grave old folks say.
The suns go down and other suns will rise;
For us when once our transient day's light dies
Is one eternal night to sleep. Wherefore
Give me a thousand kisses and again
A hundred, and another thousand yet,
And still a hundred and a thousand more,
Till they be grown to many thousands. Then
Let us lose count of them and quite forget;
Lest some base soul should envy us that wist
The number of the kisses we had kissed.
